Inside of the box, hidden under the book, is an insect cast in acrylic resin. The insect depicts the author's idea of "Metamorphosis" of a man changing into a bug. There are different types of insects used in this edition with each book utilizing one of the insects listed below: Heterometrus spinifer Malaysian forest scorpion Rhomborrhina gigantea (Green) Scarab beetles

Prosopocoilus astacoides Beetle of the Family Lucanidae

Prosopocoilus astacoides Beetle of the Family Lucanidae

Prosopocoilus astacoides Beetle of the Family Lucanidae

Brachypelma klaasi Mexican pink tarantula

Vespa mandarinia Asian giant hornet

This is what the maker of the Insects cast in acrylic resin says about his work:

"The insects cast in acrylic resin are fascinating specimens of the insect kingdom.

Creepy scorpions, luscious colors of the Green Rose Chafer, in such detail that you can see the eye and the sophisticated body structure, feet, as well as antennae and hair! Yes, that provides detailed representatives from the insect kingdom embedded in high-quality acrylic resin. Its clarity even seems like glass! Real insects in resin put there in a position to create unique learning tools, relics, collectibles, decorative objects and unconventional and surprising gifts.

"Yes" nature and its beauty is not the exception and please note that there was no unnecessary killing insects to embed into the resin. Let us specify this straight away, animal rights supporters are certainly calmed when we confirm that we do not kill insects - insects in the resin are always watered until their natural death. These insects are grown on farms that are specific to each exclusively designed breed". Signed by Sobota.

"This is a unique story about a much-loved car. The Morgan Motor Company was once one of the largest car-makers in Britain and has been owned and run by the Morgan family for three generations. The story of how it came about and managed to survive two World Wars, umpteen recessions and the rigors of modern red tape is contained in this book. The story was told to me by Peter Morgan, son of the founder." "The frontispiece for each book is a Royal Mail postage stamp of a Morgan car from the Classic Car Series, October 1996. The foreword was written by Peter Morgan and the books are signed by him. I used to live just a few miles from the Morgan factory and would take the books in for him to sign as they were finished. He went in to work every day (health permitting) and was unfailingly courteous, always asking who the books were for, and he very often knew the purchaser. A few months before he died, I moved to Canada, and decided not to complete the edition without his signature. The edition is therefore terminated at 70 copies." [sic]

A tiny souvenir item, a microphotograph in a circle not more than 2mm. in diameter and mounted on a powerful magnifying lens of the same size. Set into an ivory cylinder, turned to resemble a tiny telescope. The text can be seen by looking through the scope. "Stanhopes or Stanho-scopes are optical devices that enable the viewing of microphotographs without using a microscope. They were invented by René Dagron in 1857. Dagron bypassed the need for an expensive microscope to view the microscopic photographs by attaching the microphotograph at the end of a modified Stanhope lens. He called the devices bijoux photo-microscopiques or microscopic photo-jewelry. In 1862, Dagron displayed the devices at the Exhibition in London, where he got an "Honourable Mention" and presented them to Queen Victoria. In 1864 Dagron became famous when he produced a stanhope optical viewer which enabled the viewing of a microphotograph 1 square millimetre (0.0016 sq in), (equivalent in size to the head of a pin), that included the portraits of 450 people.
